I may say that they look on his production as if it were meant for a sort of private letter to the Democratic party in general. Yes, we must in all our calculations keep in mind that the American people have a confidence in Cleveland so great that the critics might call it an infatuation." Men from the central west, especially Indiana and Illinois, say: "All one fellows have been asking, 'Why doesn't Cleveland speak out?' 'Which bill is he for-house or senate?' They have been as much puzzied over it as we used to be in the old campaign as to what side of a Cleveland has spoken cut, and a little too loud, some of them think, but they do at least know where he stands, and they are glad of that." Mr. Lapham of Rhode Island may be taken as a fair representative of middle, northern and eastern Democrats, and he says: "It was a bad idea to write such a letter and worse to publish it, but it |sn't every mistake that kills. The vote by which the Tucker resolu-tion for am a ling the constitution passed the house is spoken of with surprise by senators, and some of them are inclined to consider it a sort of blow at the senate. Mr. Tucker, however, is quite confident that it will go through the latter body and be adopted, though he thinks it may be years before enough states approve of There is," he says, "no limit on the time the states are to give assent. If 10 approve and one rejects it, the 10 are counted in its favor, and the one in the negative is not counted, and the matter may be submitted again and again. The precedent established by the ruling of the secretary of state when one state wanted to withdraw its assent to the fifteenth amendment is in point. With 44 states, we should need the assent of 33, and that of 14 is assured in advance, their legislatures having formally resolved in its favor. It has been overlooked that this amendment is practically going into force now, as several states are nominating their senators at state conventions. Illinois started the practice, Michigan followed, and other states are falling into line."

Some Out of Work. Changes in the departments, which had been suspended for a time, have been begun again, though there are comparatively few dismissals. According to the state bulletin, there will be in the department of the interior at the close of this month 133 promotions, 64 reductions and 38 dismissals, all in accordance with gradings made after examination by the commissioners.

There is the usual rucket over it, and many charges of favoritism are made, but the officials declare that it is done entirely upon the record for efficiency, and when In doubt the old soldler has been preferred.
